Ph.D. Program Framework at Faculty of Medical Sciences, University of Delhi, Delhi: A Synthesis of Guidelines

Executive Summary

The University of Delhi aims to develop a high standard of education and research across various disciplines, including medicine and allied sciences. The objective of the Ph.D. program is to develop independent, research-oriented clinicians and basic scientists trained to address research questions through a translational approach. Candidates will become well-versed in research methodology and acquire the right approach to scientific inquiry.

Candidates will be enrolled under five distinct categories, primarily differentiated by their funding source: National/Own Fellowships, Extramural Project Fellowships, Senior Research Fellowships, or as permanent institute faculty/staff and Self Finance. The selection for merit-based seats will be made through an interview. The program is highly structured, with oversight from a central Board of Research Studies (BRS) and a mandatory, dedicated Research Advisory Committee (RAC) for each scholar to monitor progress through biannual meetings.

Academic requirements are stringent, mandating pre-Ph.D. coursework in research methodology and biostatistics, successful completion of a two-part qualifying examination within the first year, and the publication of at least two original research papers in NMC/ NDC (DCI) approved indexed journals prior to thesis submission. The program duration is typically three to five years for full-time candidates and up to six years for part-time candidates. The guidelines provide exhaustive detail on every aspect of the program, from the eligibility and responsibilities of research guides to the specific procedures for thesis evaluation, public defense (viva-voce), and the final conferral of the degree, ensuring a high standard of academic and research integrity.
