Fiction	4	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To examine the dynamic relationship between storytelling and human experience by reference to texts that are drawn from a diversity of cultural contexts and articulate contrasting frameworks of identity and action.
- To critically evaluate the core elements of fiction—character, plot, setting, theme, point of view, and style—in literary texts.
- To explore the interplay between fiction and society, analysing how literature reflects and shapes society and culture.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, the students will be able to

- critically engage with fictional texts, articulate their insights effectively, and have a deeper overall understanding of theoretical concerns related to the modalities of fiction.
- interpret and critique works of fiction using techniques of literary and cultural analysis, considering historical, cultural, and thematic elements.
- acquire advanced critical skills.

Credit Distribution, Eligibility and Pre-requisites of the Course

Course Title and Code	Credits	Credit Distribution for the Course			Eligibility Criteria	Pre-requisite of the course if any
		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
Translation Studies	4	3		1	NA	NA

Course Objectives

- To develop a critical understanding and explore theoretical, linguistic, and aesthetic dimensions of translation as an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural act.
- To equip students with advanced research and analytical skills in translation methodologies with digital translation tools, corpus analysis, and translation analytics.
- To encourage students to conduct original research in translation studies with a focus on comparative literature, global multicultural discourse, and the role of translation in creating a useful knowledge repository.

Course Learning Outcomes

After completing this course, the students will be able to

- develop conceptual and critical understanding of translation as an act of maintaining balance between at least two languages and cultures.
- distinguish between translation and transcreation, maintain cultural correspondence, and analyse interpretive transformation across literary and digital contexts.
- apply digital and research-based methodologies, including translation analytics, multimodal tools, and AI-assisted systems, to complete independent short-term projects.

Unit III: Translation and Interdisciplinarity

- Digital textuality, AI-assisted and machine and/or computer-aided translation
- Digital Archiving, Digital Humanities Tools and Multimodal Translation (Integration of Text, Image, and Sound)
- Interdisciplinary Approaches to Translation

Unit-IV Application in Translation

Students will be given a task to translate at least 25 pages from a book or Web Text and write 8-10 pages on problems and barriers in Translation. While translating from the Source Language (SL) to the Target Language (TL), students must ensure that either the SL or TL is English. Some of the suggested areas are:

- Comparative analysis of one source text and its translations
- Focus on theoretical interpretation and cultural shifts.
- Problems in Multimodal Translation
- Mapping Translation Flow in Digital Humanities

		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
Research Methodology	4	3	0	1

Course Objectives

- To introduce students to the key concepts, methods, and terminology of research in the Humanities and English Studies, and to help them conceptualize research problems and prepare research proposals.
- To develop students' skills in academic writing, citation, and ethical research practices, while enabling them to connect theoretical approaches with practical research applications in English Studies.
- To equip students with critical and analytical tools for evaluating scholarly sources, designing research frameworks, and interpreting data within interdisciplinary and comparative contexts.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course, students will be able to

- identify and apply key research concepts and paradigms in the Humanities, including the ability to frame research questions, formulate hypotheses, and design small-scale research projects.
- critically evaluate existing scholarship and theoretical frameworks to develop original, well-supported arguments that contribute to ongoing academic conversations in English Studies.
- demonstrate competence in academic writing, citation, and ethical research practices by producing a well-structured research proposal and a short research paper.

Contents

Unit I: Understanding Research in English Studies

Meaning and scope of research in Humanities

Kinds of research: textual, theoretical, empirical, interdisciplinary, archival, and visual
 Research paradigms
 The structure of a research process
 The role of creativity and critical thinking in research
Praman Shashtra

Unit II: Basics of Research Design and Data Handling

Research question and hypothesis formulation
 Identifying Primary and Secondary Sources
 Review of literature: purpose, structure, and strategies
 Data collection and interpretation
 Use of digital resources and academic databases

Unit III: Academic Writing and Ethics

Academic writing styles and structuring an argument
 Citation and referencing styles: MLA and Chicago (latest editions)
 Research ethics and plagiarism
 Responsible use of AI tools in research (checking bias, citation accuracy)
 Managing references

Unit IV: Short-term Project

Students may select any literary area or topic of their choice for intensive reading and independent research. Under faculty mentorship, they will identify a focused research question and develop a proposal and abstract grounded in suitable critical or theoretical frameworks. The unit will culminate in a short research paper (not exceeding 2,000 words) that reflects conceptual clarity, analytical depth, and originality of thought.

Evaluation:

- Group presentations on selected research topics
- Submission of a final term paper

Unit IV

Short-term project

Students will select an author or theoretical text from any unit for intensive reading and independent research. Under faculty mentorship, they will identify a focused area of inquiry and develop a research proposal and abstract grounded in critical and theoretical discourse. The course will culminate in a short research paper (1,500–2,000 words) that demonstrates theoretical understanding, analytical depth, and originality of thought.

Suggested Broader Areas for Research (illustrative and not exhaustive):

- Modernity: its challenges and promise
- Literature and modernity
- Postcolonial imaginings of the Long Twentieth Century
- Representations of the Long Twentieth Century in a specific genre
- Cross-generic comparisons

Translation Studies	4	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To develop a critical understanding and explore theoretical, linguistic, and aesthetic dimensions of translation as an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural act among students.
- To equip students with advanced research and analytical skills in translation methodologies with digital translation tools, corpus analysis, and translation analytics.
- To encourage students to conduct original research in translation studies with a focus on comparative literature, global multicultural discourse, and the role of translation in creating a useful knowledge repository.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, students will be able to

- develop conceptual and critical understanding of translation as an act of maintaining balance between two languages and cultures with desired objectivity and application of classical and contemporary theories.
- distinguish between translation and transcreation, maintain cultural correspondence, and analyse interpretive transformation across literary and digital contexts.
- apply digital and research-based methodologies, including translation analytics, multimodal tools, and AI-assisted systems, to complete independent short-term projects that critically assess problems in the translation, multicultural, and multilingual digital age.

Literature & Metaphysics	04	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To provide an understanding of core issues in metaphysical debate such as narratives of origin, a sense of the holy, the individual soul and the larger community.
- To set out a variety of literary responses to these themes and analyse them within their diverse cultural contexts, as well as through broader historical channels.
- To articulate through a short project a critical sense of the relationship among diverse shades of belief and their impact upon literature.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, the students will be able to

- identify and evaluate the literary methods involved in engaging with metaphysical debate.
- assess the ethical and aesthetic values that emerge from a relationship between literature and metaphysics.
- apply these values to cultural experience within and outside the domain of a short-term research project that they have constructed.

Unit IV: Short-term Project

Students will select an area of study relevant to the course for intensive reading and independent research. Under faculty mentorship, they will identify a focused area of inquiry and develop a research proposal and abstract grounded in appropriate critical or theoretical frameworks. The unit will culminate in a short research paper (not exceeding 2,000 words) that demonstrates conceptual understanding, analytical depth, and originality of thought.

Suggested Broader Areas for Research (Illustrative but not exhaustive):

- The Literary and the Visual in a given context
- Intermedial adaptation
- Conditions of production of Visual Art
- Identity and Art
- The difficulties of categorization

Course Title and Code	Credits	Credit Distribution for the Course			Eligibility Criteria	Pre-requisite of the course if any
		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
Literature & Metaphysics	04	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To provide an understanding of core issues in metaphysical debate such as narratives of origin, a sense of the holy, the individual soul and the larger community.
- To set out a variety of literary responses to these themes and analyse them within their diverse cultural contexts, as well as through broader historical channels.
- To articulate through a short project a critical sense of the relationship among diverse shades of belief and their impact upon literature.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, the students will be able to

- identify and evaluate the literary methods involved in engaging with metaphysical debate.
- assess the ethical and aesthetic values that emerge from a relationship between literature and metaphysics.
- apply these values to cultural experience within and outside the domain of a short-term research project that they have constructed.

- Develop publishable-quality research papers or translations.
- Equip students with professional academic skills.

Course Learning Outcomes:

By the end of the course students will be able to:

- write advanced research articles integrating theory and method with discipline-specific outcomes.
- revise manuscripts using peer and mentor feedback.
- navigate publication workflows, submission guidelines, and ethical digital tools.

UNIT I: Advanced Research Design

Refining research problems into high-level arguments and intervention statements. Epistemological positioning: advanced theoretical alignment

Designing article-level structures

- Thesis articulation
- Methodological justification
- Intervention, scope,

limitations Mapping publication

venues strategically

Ethical research at an advanced level: data transparency, permissions, translation ethics.

Activity: Draft an extended abstract + article blueprint.

UNIT II: Manuscript Writing, Revision, and Publication Workflow

Writing core article sections with disciplinary sophistication: Introduction, Methodology, Analysis and argument development, Conclusion

Peer-review simulations

Manuscript revision: developmental, structural, and line editing.

Formatting for submission portals; cover letters; dealing with reviewer reports. Ethical and effective integration of AI in editing, data handling, and workflow.

Activity: Submit a research proposal for writing dissertation (1500–2000 word) Or Translation of a short work

Course Title and Code	Credits	Credit Distribution for the Course			Eligibility Criteria	Pre-requisite of the course if any
		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
GE: Translation Studies	4	3	0	1	NA	NA

Course Objectives

- To develop a critical understanding and explore theoretical, linguistic, and aesthetic dimensions of translation as an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural act.
- To equip students with advanced research and analytical skills in translation methodologies with digital translation tools, corpus analysis, and translation analytics.
- To encourage students to conduct original research in translation studies with a focus on comparative literature, global multicultural discourse, and the role of translation in creating a useful knowledge repository.

Course Learning Outcomes

After completing this course, the students will be able to

- develop conceptual and critical understanding of translation as an act of maintaining balance between two languages and cultures with desired objectivity and application of classical and contemporary theories.
- distinguish between translation and transcreation, maintain cultural correspondence, and analyse interpretive transformation across literary and digital contexts.
- apply digital and research-based methodologies, including translation analytics, multimodal tools, and AI-assisted systems, to complete independent short-term projects that critically assess problems in the translation, multicultural, and multilingual digital age.

Credit Distribution, Eligibility and Pre-requisites of the Course

Course Title and Code	Credits	Credit Distribution for the Course			Eligibility Criteria	Pre-requisite of the course if any
		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
Translation Studies	4	3		1	NA	NA

Course Objectives

- To develop a critical understanding and explore theoretical, linguistic, and aesthetic dimensions of translation as an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural act.
- To equip students with advanced research and analytical skills in translation methodologies with digital translation tools, corpus analysis, and translation analytics.
- To encourage students to conduct original research in translation studies with a focus on comparative literature, global multicultural discourse, and the role of translation in creating a useful knowledge repository.

Course Learning Outcomes

After completing this course, the students will be able to

- develop conceptual and critical understanding of translation as an act of maintaining balance between at least two languages and cultures.
- distinguish between translation and transcreation, maintain cultural correspondence, and analyse interpretive transformation across literary and digital contexts.
- apply digital and research-based methodologies, including translation analytics, multimodal tools, and AI-assisted systems, to complete independent short-term projects.

Unit III: Translation and Interdisciplinarity

- Digital textuality, AI-assisted and machine and/or computer-aided translation
- Digital Archiving, Digital Humanities Tools and Multimodal Translation (Integration of Text, Image, and Sound)
- Interdisciplinary Approaches to Translation

Unit-IV Application in Translation

Students will be given a task to translate at least 25 pages from a book or Web Text and write 8-10 pages on problems and barriers in Translation. While translating from the Source Language (SL) to the Target Language (TL), students must ensure that either the SL or TL is English. Some of the suggested areas are:

- Comparative analysis of one source text and its translations
- Focus on theoretical interpretation and cultural shifts.
- Problems in Multimodal Translation
- Mapping Translation Flow in Digital Humanities

- To equip students with critical and analytical tools for evaluating scholarly sources, designing research frameworks, and interpreting data within interdisciplinary and comparative contexts.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course, students will be able to

- identify and apply key research concepts and paradigms in the Humanities, including the ability to frame research questions, formulate hypotheses, and design small-scale research projects.
- critically evaluate existing scholarship and theoretical frameworks to develop original, well-supported arguments that contribute to ongoing academic conversations in English Studies.
- demonstrate competence in academic writing, citation, and ethical research practices by producing a well-structured research proposal and a short research paper.

Contents

Unit I: Understanding Research in English Studies

Meaning and scope of research in Humanities

Kinds of research: textual, theoretical, empirical, interdisciplinary, archival, and visual
 Research paradigms
 The structure of a research process
 The role of creativity and critical thinking in research
Praman Shashtra

Unit II: Basics of Research Design and Data Handling

Research question and hypothesis formulation
 Identifying Primary and Secondary Sources
 Review of literature: purpose, structure, and strategies
 Data collection and interpretation
 Use of digital resources and academic databases

Unit III: Academic Writing and Ethics

Academic writing styles and structuring an argument
 Citation and referencing styles: MLA and Chicago (latest editions)
 Research ethics and plagiarism
 Responsible use of AI tools in research (checking bias, citation accuracy)
 Managing references

Unit IV: Short-term Project

Students may select any literary area or topic of their choice for intensive reading and independent research. Under faculty mentorship, they will identify a focused research question and develop a proposal and abstract grounded in suitable critical or theoretical frameworks. The unit will culminate in a short research paper (not exceeding 2,000 words) that reflects conceptual clarity, analytical depth, and originality of thought.

Evaluation:

- Group presentations on selected research topics
- Submission of a final term paper

Unit IV

Short-term project

Students will select an author or theoretical text from any unit for intensive reading and independent research. Under faculty mentorship, they will identify a focused area of inquiry and develop a research proposal and abstract grounded in critical and theoretical discourse. The course will culminate in a short research paper (1,500–2,000 words) that demonstrates theoretical understanding, analytical depth, and originality of thought.

Suggested Broader Areas for Research (illustrative and not exhaustive):

- Modernity: its challenges and promise
- Literature and modernity
- Postcolonial imaginings of the Long Twentieth Century
- Representations of the Long Twentieth Century in a specific genre
- Cross-generic comparisons

Translation Studies	4	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To develop a critical understanding and explore theoretical, linguistic, and aesthetic dimensions of translation as an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural act among students.
- To equip students with advanced research and analytical skills in translation methodologies with digital translation tools, corpus analysis, and translation analytics.
- To encourage students to conduct original research in translation studies with a focus on comparative literature, global multicultural discourse, and the role of translation in creating a useful knowledge repository.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, students will be able to

- develop conceptual and critical understanding of translation as an act of maintaining balance between two languages and cultures with desired objectivity and application of classical and contemporary theories.
- distinguish between translation and transcreation, maintain cultural correspondence, and analyse interpretive transformation across literary and digital contexts.
- apply digital and research-based methodologies, including translation analytics, multimodal tools, and AI-assisted systems, to complete independent short-term projects that critically assess problems in the translation, multicultural, and multilingual digital age.

Literature & Metaphysics	04	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To provide an understanding of core issues in metaphysical debate such as narratives of origin, a sense of the holy, the individual soul and the larger community.
- To set out a variety of literary responses to these themes and analyse them within their diverse cultural contexts, as well as through broader historical channels.
- To articulate through a short project a critical sense of the relationship among diverse shades of belief and their impact upon literature.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, the students will be able to

- identify and evaluate the literary methods involved in engaging with metaphysical debate.
- assess the ethical and aesthetic values that emerge from a relationship between literature and metaphysics.
- apply these values to cultural experience within and outside the domain of a short-term research project that they have constructed.

Unit IV: Short-term Project

Students will select an area of study relevant to the course for intensive reading and independent research. Under faculty mentorship, they will identify a focused area of inquiry and develop a research proposal and abstract grounded in appropriate critical or theoretical frameworks. The unit will culminate in a short research paper (not exceeding 2,000 words) that demonstrates conceptual understanding, analytical depth, and originality of thought.

Suggested Broader Areas for Research (Illustrative but not exhaustive):

- The Literary and the Visual in a given context
- Intermedial adaptation
- Conditions of production of Visual Art
- Identity and Art
- The difficulties of categorization

Course Title and Code	Credits	Credit Distribution for the Course			Eligibility Criteria	Pre-requisite of the course if any
		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
Literature & Metaphysics	04	3	1	0

Course Objectives

- To provide an understanding of core issues in metaphysical debate such as narratives of origin, a sense of the holy, the individual soul and the larger community.
- To set out a variety of literary responses to these themes and analyse them within their diverse cultural contexts, as well as through broader historical channels.
- To articulate through a short project a critical sense of the relationship among diverse shades of belief and their impact upon literature.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of the course, the students will be able to

- identify and evaluate the literary methods involved in engaging with metaphysical debate.
- assess the ethical and aesthetic values that emerge from a relationship between literature and metaphysics.
- apply these values to cultural experience within and outside the domain of a short-term research project that they have constructed.

Course Objectives

This course enables students to:

- To introduce to the basics of Digital Humanities and use digital tools and methods to analyse, interpret data in the traditional areas of Humanities and Social sciences.
- To rethink the humanities through the digital lens-how texts, languages, and cultural expressions acquire new meanings in networked, data-driven, and algorithmic environments.
- To acquire skills and expertise for effectively designing, creating and implementing digital projects.

Course Learning Outcomes

By the end of this course, students will be able to

- learn the application of new research methods to ask new questions, and advance new forms of scholarship.
- understand Digital Humanities as an interdisciplinary space and learn how digital technologies reshape textuality, interpretation, and linguistic power.
- develop and curate new research projects through collaboration with other disciplines like history, Media Studies, computer science, library science, etc.

GE: Translation Studies

Credit Distribution, Eligibility and Pre-requisites of the Course

Course Title and Code	Credits	Credit Distribution for the Course			Eligibility Criteria	Pre-requisite of the course if any
		Lecture	Tutorial	Practical/ Practice
GE: Translation Studies	4	3	0	1	NA	NA

Course Objectives

- To develop a critical understanding and explore theoretical, linguistic, and aesthetic dimensions of translation as an interdisciplinary and cross-cultural act.
- To equip students with advanced research and analytical skills in translation methodologies with digital translation tools, corpus analysis, and translation analytics.
- To encourage students to conduct original research in translation studies with a focus on comparative literature, global multicultural discourse, and the role of translation in creating a useful knowledge repository.

Course Learning Outcomes

After completing this course, the students will be able to

- develop conceptual and critical understanding of translation as an act of maintaining balance between two languages and cultures with desired objectivity and application of classical and contemporary theories.
- distinguish between translation and transcreation, maintain cultural correspondence, and analyse interpretive transformation across literary and digital contexts.
- apply digital and research-based methodologies, including translation analytics, multimodal tools, and AI-assisted systems, to complete independent short-term projects that critically assess problems in the translation, multicultural, and multilingual digital age.
