DCRC GlobaLense: A Journal of Social Science Research

Theme: Popularizing Governance: Policy vs Politics

ABSTRACT

Governance has taken the centre stage in the paradigm of market-oriented globalization. The policy-led governance model has come to resonate with electoral satisfaction, freebie orientation, and short-term policy solutions. Amidst the electoral competition, distinction between the realm and practices of welfarism and populism have been difficult to be demarcated. The idea of governance has enlarged its canvas with astounding agenda setting, policy propaganda and electoral campaigns. The twenty first century has reverberated as the general will of the people through popular demands. This phenomenon has resurfaced at the global level with the rise of charismatic leaders and populist politics. This theme invites articles to delve into the convergence and divergence between policy and politics in the domain of popularizing governance.
